What do you value most about working with trainees?

“

A few things in particular spring to mind. First – a general eagerness to learn, progress, and take more responsibility. Everyone can benefit from having more of these qualities!

Second – a certain freshness and open-mindedness to problem-solving. Being at the start of their legal careers, trainees are often flexible and adaptable as to how they approach a new, challenging issue. Finally – it is extremely rewarding to see trainees develop, progress, and grow in stature and authority. This is something I am fortunate enough to see as part of my involvement with Graduate Recruitment initiatives.

What advice would you give to someone starting their training contract or solicitor apprenticeship?

Do not be afraid of asking questions, as long as you've already tried to answer them. Do not cut corners; be prepared to roll up your sleeves and try to take command of the details to master every task you are given. Ultimately, strive to achieve excellence in everything you do – your reach may exceed your grasp.
